JURNAL FILSAFAT

Universitas Gadjah Mada Yogyakarta

PREFACE

This journal is a collection of all the papers published in Jurnal Filsafat Vol. 34 No. 1. To reach a wider discussion, all papers are written in English. The authors discuss various topics such as assimilation, multiculturalism, hylomorphism, soft power, hegemony, technology, and gamification.

The first paper is Human's Relationship with Technology in Nick Land's Accelerationism written by Andrean Ferry Wijanarko and Septiana Dwiputri Maharani. This paper talks about the rapid advancement of technology through accelerationism, which is thought to have the potential to solve a problem related to human relations with technology. Nick Land provides a view that technological development must be accelerated and allowed to run to the point where it is anti-anthropocentric and destructive.

The second paper is Historical Analysis of Interactive Gamification Research: A Literature Review with Kuhn and Lakatos' Approaches written by Feri Hidayatullah Firmansyah, Yusep Rosmansyah, and Dimitri Mahayana. Following the researchers' background, this paper talks about Kuhn's concept of paradigm shifts and Lakatos's ideas on research programs. With those ideas, the researchers were provided with a framework to understand and explain the progression of ideas and theories in the field of interactive gamification research.

The third paper is Assimilation of Tung Chung Shu's Philosophy and the Development of Multiculturalism written by Lasiyo. This paper discusses about Tung Chung Shu, a Confucius-era philosopher, and his thoughts about the philosophical and cultural aspects of multiculturalism in China. Tung Chung Shu's thinking, argues the author, is in line with conditions that also exist in Indonesia, which has a diversity of ethnicities, cultures, religions, regions, and traditions.

The fourth paper is Freedom of Speech in Digital Communication: Rafael Capurro's Cultural Approach to Self-Formation Ethics by Mikhael Dua. This paper discusses the contribution of Capurro's thoughts on criticizing pragmatic and intoxicant digital communication. The fifth paper is Soft Power & Hegemony: Gramsci, Nye, and Cox's Perspectives written by Rika Febriani and Irwan Hamdi. This paper highlights soft power and hegemony, two of the emerging contemporary international geopolitical stratagems. In order to produce a relevant discussion for international relations studies and philosophy, this paper combines theories and ideas from both disciplines.

The sixth paper is The Origins and Values of Javanese Philosophy in Nyadran with Goat-Cow Slaughter written by Sartini, Luwiyanto, Rr. Yudiswara Ayu Permatasari, and Nur Amalia Fitri. This research talks about the origins of Nyadran and its underlying values and stories. It was found that Nyadran originated from myths surrounding the village where Nyadran was held.

The seventh paper is The Role of the Concept of Agape in Improving Aristotle's Ethics written by Silvia Maudy Rakhmawati. This paper analyses the role of the concept agape in improving Aristotle's ethics, and its relevance to well-being. Lastly, the last eighth paper in this issue is Slavoj Zizek's Criticism of Neoliberalism and Radical Political Subjects written by Yohanes De Brito Nanto and Otto Gusti N. Madung. The paper talks about the intricacies and problems of neoliberalism, which is dealt incisively using Zizek's thoughts, with roots to Marx, Hegel, Lacan, and other major philosophers. The paper then provides a solution to break neoliberalism: radical subjects.

Finally, thank you to the board of reviewers, board of editors, and staff for making this journal published. I hope the readers will enjoy reading and gain a new perspective on this edition of the journal.
